Our top story: Emmanuel Macron has praised the excellent relationship between France and the US at the end of his three-day state visit. But in the final news conference of his three-day state visit, he said he believed President Trump would walk away from the Iran nuclear deal. Earlier he'd attacked many of President Trump's policies in a speech to US Congress. The leaders of North and South Korea are set to meet on Friday for the first time in a decade. Top of President Moon's agenda will be persuading Kim Jong-un to give up his nuclear weapons. Officials in Seoul say that at this point they will not be raising Pyongyang's alleged human rights abuses. And this story is trending on

Russia Power Report, Russia - Q2 2018 - BMI Industry View; BMI Power Report

April 1, 2018

Russia Power Report

Text:

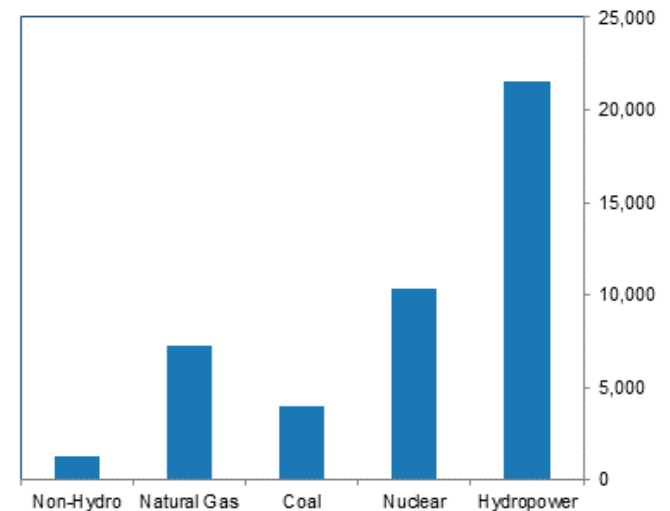

BMI View: This quarter, we have extended our forecasts to 2027. This notwithstanding, we maintain our view that a persisting global oil glut, weak economic performance and rising political tensions will continue to affect the performance of the Russian power sector in 2018, decreasing its attractiveness for investors. In the medium term, issues of over-capacity and a weak rouble offer a dim prospect of growth in the power market, leading to a muted outlook for this sector in our ten-year forecast.

EDITORIAL; North Korean move stops short of declaring abolition of N-weapons

It must be a tactical move to ease the international community's sanctions and make summit meetings with the United States and South Korea successful. It must be a clearly intended to show that North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missiles has not been mentioned.

Kim Jong Un, chairman of the Workers' Party of Korea and North Korea would suspend nuclear tests and intercontinental ballistic missile launch tests at the pleasure of the party's Central Committee. It was said that the nuclear test was suspended.

No use of nuclear weapons was also decided at the meeting, on the basis that there is "no nuclear threat."

Welcoming North Korea's latest decision as "a positive move," Prime Minister Shinzo Abe expressed a cautious stance, saying, "I'll keep a close watch on whether this move will lead to the complete, verifiable and irreversible abandonment."

Abe's response is natural considering North Korea's history of breaking agreements on denuclearization.

Will Japan be marginalized on North Korea denuclearization issue?

For some time, Japan has been urged by the North Korean nuclear issue. Pyongyang is not only signing agreements with Seoul, but also plans to hold a summit meeting with Washington before the end of May. This has put Japan in an embarrassing and awkward position. Before that, Shinzo Abe expressed a cautious stance, saying, "I'll keep a close watch on whether this move will lead to the complete, verifiable and irreversible abandonment."

Even as South Korea eased tensions with the North, it urged his South Korean counterpart Moon Jae-in to keep up pressure on the North. Moon said, according to media reports, Japan's Pyongyang policy was welcomed by neither North or South Korea. But Japan will not be totally marginalized on the North Korean nuclear issue. On the one hand, Abe's government has flexible diplomacy and can adjust its policies in accordance with exterior changes. The country will adjust its Pyongyang policy based on

[2018 Inter-Korean summit] US, North Korea not on same page on denuclearization

Since North Korea announced it was willing to negotiate over its nuclear weapons program and suspend nuclear tests, the United States has been lingering skepticism about the move. The US has been urging North Korea to perfect its nuclear program and suspend nuclear tests. North Korean leader Kim Jong-un is to hold a summit meeting with US President Donald Trump on Friday, as well as with US President-elect Joe Biden.

'denuclearization' is a key to the negotiations. The US has been urging North Korea to suspend nuclear tests and missile tests and to put down its nuclear test site, which some experts say is a key to the negotiations. The US has been urging North Korea to suspend nuclear tests and missile tests and to put down its nuclear test site, which some experts say is a key to the negotiations.

Seoul and Washington welcomed North Korea's announcement, though Trump struck a more cautious tone Sunday, tweeting that the North Korea's nuclear crisis was still a long way from being resolved. The Trump administration has been clear that it wants North Korea's "complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization," and any rewards -- such as the easing of sanctions against the North -- could be given after it substantially dismantles its nuclear weapons

China, Feeling Left Out, Has Plenty to Worry About in North Korea-U.S. Talks

BEIJING — As North Korean leader Kim Jong-un prepares his meetings with the presidents of South Korea and the United States, China has found itself in an uncomfortable place: watching from the sidelines.

Worse, many Chinese analysts say that the United States is moving toward denuclearization. But it has not been clear whether the United States has any intention of abandoning nuclear programs already in its possession, further inviting skepticism it only shows how far the United States is from reaching an understanding what denuclearization is.

Such an outcome — a reversal of the long-standing US policy — remains a long shot, amid doubts about whether the North would agree to relinquish its arsenal of nuclear weapons. Still, China finds itself removed from the center of the rapidly unfolding diplomacy, and unusually wary about Mr. Kim's objectives in reaching out to his nation's two bitterest enemies.

Mr. Kim's meeting with the South Korean president, Moon Jae-in, is set for Friday, and a meeting with President Trump — the first ever between leaders of the two

BOOK REVIEW; Murakami probes a big mystery: love

Los Angeles Times

May 7, 2017 Sunday, Home Edition

Copyright 2017 Los Angeles Times All Rights Reserved

Length: 995 words

Byline: Jeffery Renard Allen, Allen is professor of creative writing at the University of Virginia and author of the novels "Rails Under My Back" and "Song of the Shank," the latter shortlisted for the PEN/Faulkner Award. His story collection "Holding Pattern" won the Ernest J. Gaines Award for Literary Excellence.

Body

In the title story for his new collection, "Men Without Women," Haruki Murakami has his unnamed, middle-aged narrator receive a phone call at 3 in the morning informing him that his ex-girlfriend M. has committed suicide.

The call surprises the narrator for several reasons. First, M. is the third woman that he dated who killed herself. He ponders this fact: "Why these women, all still young, had taken their lives, or felt compelled to take their lives, was beyond my comprehension. I hoped it wasn't because of me." He drops the matter of his possible complicity as quickly as he raises it. Instead, he fixates on the motivations of the caller, M.'s husband: "he didn't explain a single thing to me. ... It seemed his intention was to leave me stuck somewhere in the middle, dangling between knowledge and ignorance. But why? To get me thinking about something?"

当該判例を引用している解説書

The first question concerning an alien who is not a resident, the (2) source of income, i.e., American or foreign, determines taxability. However, in making the (3) tax computation, generally American business income is taxed at the regular graduated rates and on the net income, and other U.S. income is taxed at a flat 30 percent and on the gross income. There is a special (4) withholding provision for income subject to the flat tax (as well as for wages). All of the above rules may be changed by (5) treaty.
